“There is a beautiful time that if the home decorating stars are aligned you make up a perfect nothing room! No cot, no bed, nothing but all your hopes and ambitions for your little sweet person pending. I never had the space for a room like this, but I did in my head. Monochromatic in palette for a gender-neutral surprise. Restful in its set up for all that reading time you will have and deliberately sparse so it can double up as a yoga space! Basically a dream room. Rooms like this can exist, with careful curation. And just add a large print and invest in two shelving units, load one right way up and the other upside down for the ultimate out of reach/easy to reach scenario. Storage tins look familiar? We painted all those S-26 tins (perfect with their sealant lid) as the ultimate hold-alls for creams, smalls, ointments and memory makers!”

“When your mother finds the bassinet you were born into, it makes for a hearty start to a new baby’s room. On its stand or straight on the decks, a newborn’s room becomes instantly charming. We took the old-fashioned tones from soft Kodachrome colours it made a newborn’s room that is both familiar in its colour palette as well as in its simplicity. And we all know that the last thing a newborn needs is an art collection, but a poodle and a rabbit at least keeps a sleep-challenged mum remembering her sense of humour!”

“When a small person graduates to a big bed, it is a great opportunity to hand the style baton over. Once the cot is packed down, consider a new atmosphere that will be a background to a busier school life. Pink’s best friend is most definitely navy. And when paired with a geometric approach, a newfound modernity is achieved. Old and new is a fail-safe way that guarantees you a room that is neither too ahead of its years nor too stuck in the trad phase.”

little / big boy

"Anyone with boys knows that there is just less choice – in haircuts, in bedroom options and when it comes to clothes. But lack of depth into the market doesn't seem to worry them! A bunk with the option of a sleepover hideaway underneath is an awesome situation, as it can easily then be a hideaway or a study nook. If girls' rooms generally have more things to show off on display high on shelves, boys usually need more storage for their things that seem to be ground laden! Tents, bags, boxes are all perfect ground concealers."

girl siblings

“The efficiencies of a bunk can’t be beat. Add a wall for them to collect, curate and make their own wall bound artwork installations that can make for an inspiring opportunity for budding creative minds. Orange, browns, ink blue and cream make for a dream palette that can see little girls through to teens with Barbie’s dream house, science kits and 1D posters not looking out of place!”

“There is that delicate age where a son won’t bother what you put on his walls and when he does it is a time where he will want some space of his own to dress his space accordingly. But it is also a transitory time where he is working out his likes, which is mostly always outside of the room. This gives you an open hand to possibly decorate without much consultation.”
